Let's Start!

Writing Spot: Sally needs to fill out a job application form. She needs help!

Learning Outcome

Exchange personal information about the home and family in communicative situations.

Ask your partner:

- When do you fill out forms? At school?
At work?
- What do you say in a job application?

Can Do Statements

- I can write statements joined by and, or and but.
- I can exchange personal information.
- I can complete an application form for college or work.

Let's Explore!

Sally has to fill in a form but she needs help. Who can help her?

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Sally: I need to complete a job application form but I need a little help. The deadline is tomorrow!
- Peter: Really? Which job?
- Sally: The job is for a waitress in the college coffee shop.
- Peter: Why do you need help?
- Sally: I fill in my first name and last name, Sally Davis.
- Peter: Yes, that's right. What else?
- Sally: Then I add my address, phone number and date of birth, but then it says past jobs and experience. Past jobs and experience?
- Peter: Ah I see. That means your last job. Is this your first job application?
- Sally: Yes! I am an online blogger. I work for myself. What do I write?
- Peter: Well, write about being a blogger.
- Sally: Oh OK ... Signature? What does that mean?
- Peter: It means how you sign things like your name Sally Davis, in writing.
- Sally: Sally Davis or Sally the Blogger? Ha ha, just kidding.

Let's Practice!

Learning Points

Connectors And, Or, But

You use connectors to join words and phrases. They are usually found in the middle of a sentence.

They connect ideas or sentences together.

And: to use when statements or ideas are similar.

But: to use to connect statements that express opposite ideas.

Or: gives options or choices.

Examples:

- I fill in my first name and last name.
- I need to complete a job application form but I need a little help.
- Sally Jones or Sally the Blogger?
